What's New in the Adobe Photoshop CS5?

The invention is in the field of test methods for cytopathogenic viruses and infectious agents and especially in the fields of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), herpes, hepatitis, influenza, paramyxoviruses and respiratory syncytial virus (RSV). The invention also relates to the determination of the viability of HIV or the HIV-specific substances (adhesion receptors) such as CD4+ and/or CD8+ or cells bearing the HIV receptors after exposure to a drug and more particularly to the determination of the most effective drug concentrations and their duration. More specifically, the invention relates to a test method which is based on exposing one or more cell samples infected with HIV to a test substance and then determining whether the test substance is capable of inhibiting, neutralizing, or otherwise interfering with the infectivity and/or cytopathogenic activity of the HIV or the HIV-specific substances. The invention is also useful to identify the stage of the infection of a cell with HIV. The invention is also useful to identify the subtype of HIV into the two major groups (M and N). The invention is also useful to identify the site of the HIV infection in the host cell. The invention is also useful to identify a drug substance effective in inhibiting, neutralizing, or otherwise interfering with the infectivity and/or cytopathogenic activity of the HIV or the HIV-specific substances. U.S. Pat. No. 4,994,387 granted Feb. 19, 1991 to Temin and Szekely describes live virus RT-PCR. The live virus RT-PCR method described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,994,387 is not sufficiently sensitive and accurate to permit a reliable determination of the stage of HIV infection or the viral subtype of HIV. T. Temin and A. Zilman also describe PCR methods using the cloned HIV genome in U.S. Pat. No. 5,063,242, U.S. Pat. No. 5,097,550, and U.S. Pat. No. 5,258,488 which was issued on Nov. 16, 1992. The nucleic acid from HIV is known to be encapsulated in viral particles in the cell. The nucleic acid is contained within the viral particles and the location of the nucleic acid within the viral particle may indicate the location of the viral infection. Moreover, it is known that viruses in
